

For my project I decided to do a recipe organizer. Looking through some project from past years I came across one that had a good start on what I had in mind. So I ended up taking it and making several improvements:

1. Originally the process for manual recipe input was done in a generated workbook with implemented protection, so the user could only enter the information in editable cells. The biggest inconvenience that I found was due to the fact that whenever you added a field for another ingredient/direction you could not undo it without restarting the form, and if you were to save it as is, it would create a copy of the previously entered data. SO eliminate this redundancy I replaced this workbook form with a much more flexible userform, where it is possible to edit the list of ingredients and directions without saving additional fields or restarting the form.

2. I also added a new category which I felt deserved a separate column on the recipe list tab – dessert category:
